A county in the southwestern part of the State, 110 miles south of Kansas City, on the northwestern slope of the Ozark range. It is bounded on the north by St. Clair county, on the east by Polk County, on the south by Dade County, and on the west by Barton and Vernon Counties. Its area is 496 square miles.

The principal towns are Stockton, the county seat, and Eldorado Springs and Jerico Springs, health resorts.

The first settlement in the county was made by John Crisp, Robert Graham, Thomas English, and a man named Crump, who located on the Sac River, two miles east of the present Stockton, November 17, 1832. The first mill was built by Philip Crow, on Bear Creek, three miles northwest of the present Stockton, and about the same time John Williams built a mill on Cedar Creek.

The first child born in the county was Susan, daughter of Robert and Ann Graham, October 13, 1833; she became the wife of George W. Sallee, and died in 1880. The first marriage was the same year, that of John Crisp and Melinda, daughter of Thomas English. The first funeral, date not ascertainable was that of James Hopper; James J. Johnson, a Baptist, the pioneer minister, conducted the services. The first physicians were Samuel W. Horn and William Gordon. Zimri Crabtree located on the site of Stockton, March 26, 1846, and the same year the first store in the county was opened there. In 1847 James M. Blakey operated a ferry on Big Sac River, where he had a mill, on the road from Stockton to Polk County. In 1849 Samuel Caplinger built a mill on Sac River, seven miles north of Stockton.

The first school was taught by Andrew Stewart, in 1841, near Stockton, and among his pupils was Thomas B. Graham. Another early teacher was C. Lindsey.

Cedar County was created February 14, 1845, from portions of Dade and St. Clair Counties, and was named for Cedar Creek one of its principal water courses. The first county court was held April 7th, following, at Crow's Mill, near the mouth of Bear Creek. Thomas Jones, James L. Henry, and Allen Hamer were the justices, with Joseph Allen as clerk, James Cawthon as Sheriff, and Thomas Smith as assessor.

The seat of justice was established at Stockton in 1846. The first circuit court session was held by Judge Foster P. Wright, September 29, 1845, at the house of Elisha Hunter, two miles south of Stockton, on the Greenfield Road.

Among the early attorneys were S. M. Grant and Shadrach Chandler; Waldo P. Johnson, afterward a circuit judge and a United States Senator, and DeWitt C. Ballou and Littleberry

Hendricks, who both occupied the bench in later years.

Previous to the Civil War the county was disturbed by hostile meetings between Free-Soil and slavery men, on account of its proximity to Kansas. It is believed that the arms bearing portion of the population entered the contending armies in about equal numbers. In the Union service were two companies of the Seventh Provisional Regiment, commanded by Captains P. H. Rohrer and Dennis H. Conaway, afterward forming a part of the Fifteenth Cavalry Regiment, Missouri State Militia; a considerable portion of the Eighth Cavalry Regiment, Missouri State Militia, commanded by Colonel Joseph J. Gravelly, a distinguished citizen of the county, and a part of a battery of artillery, commanded by Captain William C. Montgomery, in which served Lieutenants T. M. Montgomery and T. J. Travis. In the Confederate service were the Stockton Grays, commanded by Captain B. F. Walker; companies commanded by Captains J. A. Musgrove and J. W. Prowell, and a portion of a company commanded by Captain Reynolds, then of St. Clair County. Captain Walker became colonel, succeeding Colonel James Cawthon, of Stockton, who was killed in the battle. During the war the county was frequently traversed by bodies of troops of either side, and many deeds of violence and destruction were committed.
